

2 KILLED WHEN AUTOMOBILE SKIDS

TO HOLD FOX HUNT SUNDAY AT MOKENA

There is going to be a big fox hunt at Mokena this Sunday when all the hunters and would be hunters in this and surrounding territories are asked to meet at Mokena in front of the Braun pool hall at 12 o'clock noon. From there the hunters will start out on the big fox hunt. No rifles will be permitted, only shot guns are to be used. Quite a number of foxes have been reported in this section recently and they say there is a possibility of bagging a few wolves. They have also put in their appearance.

LONE WOLF SHOT IN HOMER TOWNSHIP

Last Friday, a wolf was tracked down and shot in Homer township. Those claiming the honors are Bud Jungles, Howard Jungles, Tucker Weiler, Ralph Reiter and Loren Sass. Mr. Reiter is given credit for the fatal shot. Last Sunday a fox drive was held in the same territory and three foxes captured.

Horses Are Coming Back

Horses are coming back into their own as was shown the past week by the high prices paid at the auction sale last Friday at the Wm. Seivert farm near Mokena. The bidding was very spirited and the prices shot up high for horses. The same type of horses which brought $50. a year ago brought $165 in this sale. The same high prices seem to prevail at all farm sales that have been held in this territory this winter.

Breidert is doubtful about his starting lineup but it is rumored that it will be Knight and Semmler at forwards, J. C. Weitendorf at center, with the Heuser Bros. at the Guard positions. Bauch, C. Pfaff and H. Mark are likely starters who might win starting berths. The Lions are fortunate in having Hedges as cheer leader.

Little has been heard from the Firemen's camp but Mgr. Fred Kohl-hagen has made some hints that his team will be in prime condition for this game. Vollrath and Wischover at forwards, Oetter at center and Bennett and Warning at guards is a likely starting team.

Come out and see this demonstration of courage. The Frankfort Civic Band will be on hand to furnish music.

WHY THE NEWS-BULLETIN HAS BEEN RECEIVED LATE AT FRANKFORT

For two weeks hand running the News-Bulletin bundle for our Frankfort subscribers has been arriving in Frankfort Saturday evening instead of Friday evening with the result that our rural subscribers did not get their papers until the following Monday.

Upon investigation it was found that the express and baggage man on the Rock Island train westbound at 7:40 a.m., on Friday threw the Frankfort bundle off at New Lenox instead of taking it to Joliet from where the bundle is routed by the Joliet postoffice via bus to Frankfort. The Frankfort bundle laid at New Lenox until Saturday afternoon before it was forwarded to Frankfort.

Last Saturday the same messenger threw the Frankfort bundle off at New Lenox again. This time Postmaster O'Daniels forwarded the Frankfort bundle to Joliet on the noon train but for some unexplained reason the bundle in question did not reach the Joliet postoffice until late Saturday morning and was not received in Frankfort until Saturday evening, which accounts for the late arrival of the News-Bulletin in Frankfort the last two weeks. The matter has been reported twice to the Superintendent of mail service in Chicago and it is hoped that the irregularities encountered will be overcome.

Hold Double Funeral For New Lenox Men

Emil Novak, 19 years old and Robt. Reed, also 19 years old, both of New Lenox met tragic deaths as a result of an automobile accident on R. 66 seven miles southwest of Joliet late Saturday night.

They were driving the car belonging to Walter Sayers 25 years old also of New Lenox and the first report was that Mr. Sayers had been killed. A deputy sheriff went to the Sayers home to notify the family of his death. The news had hardly been made known when Sayers walked in and the family was never so glad to see anyone.

Mr. Sayers is employed at the Munitions plant at Wilmington and was quite surprised when he reported for work and found that his co-workers had been taking up a collection to buy flowers for his funeral. They were also very much surprised to see him alive.

The details of just how the accident occurred will probably never be known. It is presumed the car skidded out of control on the slushy pavement and had crashed first into a culvert then into a telephone pole which snapped in two and fell over the car and trapped the youths. Mr. Novak suffered a broken neck and was instantly killed while his partner Reed when found was still alive but died in the St. Joseph's hospital early Sunday morning.

It was not learned where the youths were returning from while driving on the highway entering Joliet from the west.

Novak is survived by his parents Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Novak, five brothers, John, Joseph, Edw., Chas. and George and 2 sisters Mrs. Marcella Halik and Mrs. John Glade. Reed is survived by his mother, Mrs. Bessie Sayers Reed and his grandmother, Mrs. Wm. Sayers all of New Lenox.

Double funeral services were held for the victims of the tragic accident at the Sonntag Funeral home Tuesday afternoon with the Rev. B. R. Aman of the New Lenox Methodist church officiating. Burial of both youths was made in the Maple Wood cemetery in New Lenox.

MOKENA PTA TO HOLD A BAKERY SALE

For the first and, we hope, the last time during the present school term the PTA comes before the public with a plea for financial assistance. This plea is in the form of a bake sale which will be held Saturday, February 28, at the Sippel store, Mokena. Since the PTA has not resorted to all kinds of money making schemes during the year it does not hesitate now to ask the public to patronize the bake sale and in that way help to balance the budget for 1942.

Buy your bakery goods from the PTA on Saturday February 28. Thanks.

Frankfort Lions Working On Transportation, Express and Numbering Projects

A movement is on to include express service for Frankfort. At the present time all express matter has to be shipped over the Rock Island to Mokena and then hauled to Frankfort by truck or car.

Chas. Bobzin member of the village board and also member of the Lions club, advised that a numbering project is being worked on and will perhaps be under way sometime this spring. R. 45 or Kean Avenue will be the start of the numbering system.

In Heart of Southwest Pacific Fight, Islands There Assume Strategic Role

Lands of Allies in Far-Flung War Zone.

As the Yanks, Aussies, Dutch and British colonial troops battle fiercely with the Japs in the Pacific area, any news coming out from those various zones is eagerly awaited, and read.

As a result, maps, atlases and almanacs having information on this Pacific war area, especially the southwest Pacific, are being well thumbed today.

The names and the locations of many of the places mentioned both in the newspapers and radio dispatches are unfamiliar, if not vague, to millions of Americans. Many of the "hot spots" in the southwest Pacific are almost hidden on the maps. They were formerly peaceful, slow moving little sections of the world where the weather was always warm and not conducive to hard work.

Even radio commentators, and ace newsmen in the United States have been keeping their maps and reference books on the fighting area in the Pacific handy. For formerly such names as the Sulu Archipelago . . . the Shan States . . . Sarawak . . . Banda and Celebes seas . . . Marshall and Caroline islands were names, and seemingly nothing else, to them, too.

Almost everyone knows "something" about one or two of the more well known important war centers down there in the fighting zone. Such ones being Singapore, Manila, Darwin and Batavia. But to get a comprehensive understanding—or as humanly possible workable "idea"—of the location of the Allies while thrusting and counter-thrusting with their enemy, those interested in the southwest Pacific news reports are attempting to know more about the important centers of war activity and their locations to other centers.

First in Importance.

To U. S. war news readers, first in importance are the Philippines. These islands, not one or two big ones as some suppose, are over 7,000 in number. The Philippines were ceded to the United States after the war of 1898 with Spain. (It was "Remember the Maine" then, as it is now, "Remember Pearl Harbor.")

The importance of the Philippines in the war of the western and southwestern Pacific is seen in that the east coast of China is but a mere flying distance of only 600 miles. But Japan proper is northeast of these islands, 1,600 miles. To the southwest is Borneo and Sarawak. Directly south of the Philippines is Celebes. And New Guinea is to the southeast. These places are outlined on the map.

You can see, then, why the Japanese will have almost full control of that sector if the strategic Philippines is theirs. Sugar, hemp, minerals are the important exports from these islands. Mindanao and Luzon, the two largest, supply the most.

South of the Philippines is the Celebes sea now full of prowling subs, ships of war with crews alert, and transports of both the Allies and the Japanese.

Here in the Celebes sea zone are also thousands of islands as in the Philippines. On the west edge of the sea is the largest island of the group. It contains Borneo, North Borneo, and Sarawak. Notice on the map how the westernmost tip of Borneo is on a direct east-west line with Singapore. The same sea that touches the western islands of the Philippines, the Sulu sea, touches the northern shores of North Borneo.

Important Historic Strait.

A short time ago you read about the blasting the Dutch and the Americans gave the Japanese fleet when it moved southward through the Strait of Macassar. This strait is the one which separates the eastern coast of Borneo from the Celebes island's west coast. It is through this comparative very narrow neck of water that is afforded the most direct route from the Philippines in the north to the Java sea Dutch possessions in the south. It is the connecting link between the Celebes and the Java seas.

Years ago the shrewd Dutch Netherlands controlled trade between the Orient and Europe for over a century and a half by dominating shipping through the Macassar strait. When the British took Malaya, which is tipped at its southern end by Singapore, this domination by the Dutch was ended. Today, both of these nations are fighting side by side to stop the domination of another empire.

The Celebes? That's an island which you see on the map, located between Borneo and New Guinea. An interesting fact about this Celebes island is that it is bounded by four different seas. On its north is the Celebes sea, on the south is the Flores, on the west is the Java sea, and on the east, the Molucca. Like its companion islands down there, the exports from here are petroleum, copra, various minerals, hemp and spices.

Now look at the map again. Note the island that is east by southeast from Celebes. This elongated east-and-west island is New Guinea. Like Borneo, Celebes, Sumatra, Java, and the thousands of other smaller islands in this district, New Guinea belongs to the Dutch—the Free Dutch.

The western half of New Guinea belongs to the Dutch, but the eastern half belongs to the hard pressed British Colonial empire. Incidentally, this group of the Dutch West Indies islands (also called the Netherlands Indies) is the largest in the world. Someone has said that there is no doubt that natives living on the many inaccessible islands still "Don't know there's a war going on."

Practically the same exports come from this island that come from the others already mentioned.

Now to move to another island, another Dutch possession. See on the map where it notes, "Dutch East Indies," in heavy black printing? Directly above the word "Indies" is the island of Java. Batavia is the capital.

Batavia, and a further eastern section of Java, will go down in the war history of the southwest Pacific as being sectors in the heart and heat of the battle. Coffee has always been one of the important exports from this island. The expression, "Cup of java" is easily understandable, if not already fathomed, when Java's former export of excellent coffee bean is remembered. Because of the war, Americans don't expect to have a cup of real "Java java" when the present warehouse supply is gone.

Across a short passage of water to the west of Java (another strait named Sunda) is the embattled island of the Dutch, called Sumatra. That's the island you see on the map just below the word "Singapore."

An Island on the Equator.

Sumatra itself is one of those "cozy" little islands 1,000 miles long, about 250 miles wide, that sits astride the equator. To get an idea of how far south this island would be below the United States, one should remember that the equator which runs through Sumatra, also pierces Peru, Ecuador, Colombia and Brazil in South America. Of course, there is a difference in climate in the South American republics because of prevailing wind conditions, and ocean currents. In Sumatra the climate is hot and moist. Tropical diseases there are prevalent, and the eastern lowland is plagued by the often fatal malaria which strikes both the natives and Europeans.

An important fact about the Dutch West Indies concerns the world-wide hold it has on the quinine market. For about 90 per cent of the world's quinine—obtained from the bark of the cinchona tree—comes from the islands around the equator. When the United States saw trouble brewing in the Pacific, quinine was placed on the nation's list of strategic materials.

Back in the Seventeenth century a dose of the powdered bark of the tree (called quina-quina by the natives, from whence comes the word quinine) cured the countess of Chinchon, wife of the viceroy of Peru, of the malarial fever. Not so long after that, the tree from which the quinine bark was obtained was named the cinchona (cinchona) tree because an early scientist left out the first "h" in the word. It has been so spelled ever since.

Northeastward, across the Malacca strait, on the western side of Sumatra is Malaya. Reports of war activity in Malaya coming to America by newspaper and radio have placed this war-slashed land in a prominent spot, too.

Singapore is the base that who-soever controls it also controls all movements of ships in the Malacca strait between Malaya and Sumatra. Control also grants a very watchful eye on what goes on in the Dutch West Indies. Furthermore it gives a "view" of what is going on up in the land of India.

Whoever Has Singapore.

Singapore is at the southern tip, off the mainland of Malaya. North of Malaya is Thailand, now under the protection, so called, of Japan. The nation that fully controls both of these nations, also is well able to smash, or protect, India.

Another angle which makes the control of these two nations important is that their control means either a protection or destruction of China's, Free China's, life line—the Burma road.

Through this article you've gone over thousands of miles of water and land. In fact, you've gone over the most farflung troubled section of the world at the present time. (Despite Russia's vast battlefields, it does not equal this in extent, but maybe so in ferocity.) Troublesome area it is because the little Yellow Man of the Land of the Rising Sun decided that HE wants to run the show in his "neck of the woods." What the Yellow Man wants to be nothing else but Japanese, with complete and absolute control, is marked on the map.

Possibility Now That Sugar Rationing Will Not Continue Throughout the War . . . Japan Fortified Her Mandates

WASHINGTON. — It is possible, though one must not depend on it, that the sugar rationing will not continue throughout the duration of the war. For a considerable time we will be very short, due to various mistakes, most notable of which was not holding down the Philippine duty free imports to the figure their own people said in 1929 they could not exceed.

This was an unnatural situation. Actually the only reason the Philippines had turned so heavily to sugar was that they had what amounted to a non-competitive market in the United States. They were inside our tariff wall, and therefore did not have to meet the competition of Java, which can produce sugar more cheaply than the Philippines.

Not only that, but they were guaranteed the sale of their sugar in our market by the quota system which our department of agriculture set up, over violent protests from the Louisiana and Florida cane producers, the best producers in 20 states, and the Puerto Ricans and the Cubans.

So now we are faced with the loss of this million tons which under the rationing system, had become virtually a substantial part of our sugar rations. This is more than TWENTY MILLION POUNDS of sugar a year.

Holding Sugar Production

Curious in this connection is the fact that department of agriculture officials virtually had been at their wits' end to hold down sugar production. Beet culture had spread, from 15 states where it flourished about the time the quota system was inaugurated, to 20 states. So beet acreage was curtailed to an average extent of 17 per cent as late as 1941. Cane acreage was cut 10 per cent. This followed a previous cut of 25 per cent which involved the plowing up of growing cane!

If one studies the situation with hindsight it becomes obvious that the cries of the sugar states politicians ought to have been heeded the moment this country began lend-lease operations, long before it was admitted that we were drifting into the war. For the need for more and more industrial alcohol was evident.

Fortunately most of the cane farmers in Louisiana took a chance last September. They risked their benefit checks from the department of agriculture by planting some 25 per cent more than their quota!

Meanwhile, Cuba is increasing her production also, but no one can predict what may be the result of the war requirements for alcohol. Fortunately, alcohol can be produced from any grain.

Few White Men Ever On Japanese Mandates

One of the very worst features of the Versailles treaty has been the "mandates." It was under a "mandate" that Japan took over the Marshall and Caroline islands, and many others in the Pacific. It is around those islands that her fleet is supposed to be, say the arm chair strategists. It would seem to be the logical place for it—right on the flank of the normal route from the United States to Australia, which line is south of these islands, and to the Philippines.

It is assumed that Japan, has turned the islands, which extend for considerably more than 1,000 miles east and west, and nearly 800 miles north and south, into a nest of naval and air bases. No white men have been permitted on the islands for more than 15 years!

"You can count on the fingers of one hand the white men who have been on any one of those islands in the years since Japan took them over," a prominent diplomat said. Which leads us to wonder where the notion of a "mandate" came from and what it is all about.

The notion of a "mandate" originated in the clever minds of some of the negotiators at the Versailles conference. It was a concession to one of the famous Fourteen Points of Woodrow Wilson. The particular point in question grew out of his "Peace Without Victory" slogan, which was so irritating to the Allies, much as it may have appealed to the Germans. In fact, the Germans always have claimed that they laid down their arms in the Armistice on the basis of the Fourteen Points, and then were betrayed.

First the notion was that the territory to be taken from Germany, particularly the colonies (Alsace and Lorraine did not figure because they had been taken from France by Germany in the Franco-Prussian war, 1870) should be administered by the League of Nations. But it was decided to delegate this function to certain individual countries. Then the colonies were divided up very much as they would have been in an old-fashioned conquest, except that Japan was given much more than was warranted.

ELMER ON MORALE AND BALONEY

"I am for morale building," declared Elmer Twitchell, well-known philosopher, horseshoe pitcher and stamp collector, today. "Morale is important in any struggle. Three cheers for all we can get. But nothing is breaking my morale down just now like some of the baloney being spread by alleged morale builders."

Mr. Twitchell was more disturbed than usual. "The quicker we get the phony element out of this morale stuff the better," he resumed, pounding a table.

"At the moment it is the race track people who are pretty close to tops in overdoing this angle. I like racing. I hope the war won't stop it. But it grieves me to listen to a continuous stream of bunk about horse tracks being of primary importance to the war effort. You would think from some of this stuff that the war and the mutual windows were linked in the all-out defense effort."

"I listened to a broadcast after a big race in Florida the other afternoon, and immediately after giving the payoff prices, the broadcaster went into a spiel on the importance of the eight-race program to ultimate victory. It lacked only 'Hearts and Flowers' by a string orchestra."

"It was the crowning peak to a lot of similar flapdoodle that has been coming from the racing interests for months, and it is doing the morale-building business no good."

"Give me a day at the races when I have been working hard and am feeling blue. I yield to no man in my love of the thoroughbred. I find a peculiar attraction in the mutual window. I love the soft whispers about the good things coming up. I can even stand all those photo finishes. But don't give me that stuff about the ponies being of such vital importance that the American people will never be able to bear up through the war without them! There's a limit!"

It is now predicted that it may be necessary to ration men's socks. The center of minimum worry about this is in the Ozarks.

SONG FOR TAXPAYERS

(Irving Berlin has written a song to cheer up income taxpayers. It is called "I Paid My Income Tax Today."—WNU item.)

Hooray, hooray, hooray, hooray!
I paid my income tax today;
In acts like this I love to glory . . .
At least, my friend, that is my story!

A tax is quite a joy to me—
I paid it very cheerfully;
It made me anything but blue—
I love to come across, sez you!

When I'm feeling rather sad,
There's always something makes me glad:
I love to sing, tra la tra loo
The minute that my tax is due.

When I am feeling extra low
And down my spirits seem to go
I find relief, oh, many thanks,
In filling out some income blanks.

Should dark depression o'er me spread
Such feelings I know how to shed:
I ask an income tax to pay
And Morgenthau, he says "Okay."

Old Irv Berlin is happy, too
To pay each levy high and new,
And I'd be twice as gay, I know—
If I had all that fellow's dough.

A vaudeville unit is on its way to Iceland. It will, of course, open cold.

DEEP WATER ISLAND

by ALAN LEMAY

W-N-U-RELEASE

INSTALLMENT TWELVE

THE STORY SO FAR: Karen Waterson, convinced by her lawyer, John Colt, that she has a claim to the island estate of her grandfather, Garrett Waterson, comes with him to Honolulu and meets Tonga Dick or Richard Wayne, a member of the Wayne family which has been in control of the property since her grandfather's disappearance. Dick's uncle, James Wayne, manager of this island, Alakoa, dies from overwork and Dick attempts to work out a compromise settlement of Karen's claim. This is refused. Meantime Karen has learned that both Colt and Dick are in love with her. Dick reveals that Karen is not an heiress at all, as Garrett Waterson is alive and on his way to Alakoa. Dick and Karen leave the island together and some distance out find that Lilua, a native house-girl, has stowed away in the boat. Dick questions her regarding her actions. Now continue with the story.

"I want to know how you got onto my boat," Dick said.

"I swam," Lilua tossed at him in a quick, almost contemptuous aside. She went on talking to Karen, levelly, her face quiet except for the flame in her eyes, and her body quiet except for that easy, unconscious sway that balanced her to the left of the sea.

"You have nothing to give him," Lilua said in that inexorable, steady voice. "You can only think of position, and land, and money. Would you want him if you had first seen him sick, and helpless, and alone? You know your eyes would not have seen him at all. This is my man. If he were dead, I would make myself die. Would you?"

Suddenly Dick was unable to speak. He stood weaponless, humble, and—without any particular recourse or hope. Diffidently he turned his eyes to Karen.

Karen Waterson had gone perfectly white—whiter than sea foam, whiter than the knit linen of the little hat she wore. Her mouth was oddly distorted, but her eyes were blank. She seemed to have lost all power of motion exactly where she stood. Then the reel of the little ship unbalanced her, and by its very unkindness seemed to return her the gift of movement. Karen turned, literally fled. At the foot of the ladder she flung Dick one irrational, unreadable glance; then ran away from them into the upper night.

CHAPTER XI

Dick Wayne was left facing Lilua alone. For a moment Lilua's eyes remained fixed upon the companion-way where Karen had disappeared. Then her eyes turned to Dick, and for a moment they looked at each other.

"Lilu, Lilu," Dick said, "what have you done to me?"

For one brief moment the sharp, spear-like flames in the eyes of Lilua broke down; she looked at Tonga Dick pathetically, pitifully, with no defense behind her eyes, no barriers at all.

Dick's voice was cool, definite as a strake. "Stop it, you hear me? Forget it—cut it out!"

The girl let the sway of the ship take her, then. She swayed against the doorway's stanchion, and stayed there.

Dick took the ladder in long, reluctant strides. A glance told him that Karen was in the point of the bow.

He stood a minute by the swaying mainmast, trying to gather himself, but without any effect. Then he walked forward to the rail where Karen stood. Close to her at the rail, he drew her close against his side, easily and naturally; it had always seemed to him that she belonged nowhere else but there.

"Karen—"

She took herself away from him sharply—out of the curve of his arm, out of contact with him in more ways than one; and they stood alone, as individuals as the unrelated stars.

"Karen," Dick said, "I guess you are right; I don't know how you knew, but you knew. In a way, you foretold this, Karen."

"Perhaps," Karen said, "it's better for both of us that this happened just as it did."

That stopped him for a moment but he came on again. "What are you saying? In God's name, up helm! Do I mean so little to you—"

"Whatever you may mean to me, it seems that you have made yourself mean more to this—this Kanaka."

"Karen, it's grotesque that a native brat—"

"A brat is a child, Dick. This girl is anything but a child."

"What does it matter what she is? If you and I—"

"Perhaps it matters everything what she is. Perhaps—she's what you made her. I don't know how old she is. But that's a woman, Dick. If you've made her your own, as it seems you have—"

Her words died in her throat; but she had said enough.

For a moment then Tonga Dick Wayne faltered. The cool chiseled lines of Karen Waterson seemed infinitely far away. For a moment he was able to hope—even to believe—that he could put her out of his mind, out of his heart. For a little while this girl had become to him like a dream of the stars—but a dream that he would have been glad to forget.

Partly he could see her as she literally was—there was no doubt about that. He could see her as a thin-bodied, thin-faced San Francisco stenographer, sharp-edged in mind and manner because any girl needs to be, making her own way. He could see her in the light of the reason that she was here—a short-cutting little adventuress, willingly lending herself to the predacious brain of John Colt in the hunt for unearned fortune. A girl proud without background, arrogant without attainment.

But still behind that, like a mist-figure seen beyond steel cogs and wheels, hovered persistently his own conception of what this girl might have been—perhaps still could be. He was obsessed by the haunting belief that if what he had hunted for always was not in this girl, then it was somehow lost out of the world. "And now," Karen said, "I think you might put back to Alakoa—don't you? Because you said—"

"No," Dick answered.

"I ask you to turn back."

"I'm not going to put back. At least not yet. Not until you come to your senses, Karen."

He didn't know why he told her that. The impulse was jerking at him to do as she said, and take himself well out of this thing forever; to turn back to John Colt, and be rid of her once and for all. He could see Lilua's steady eyes—and no man could ever forget what she had said. He honestly supposed that it would have been better for him to relax into the world of Lilua—to lose himself by day in the casual adventures of the warm sea, and by night in the arms of an island woman who doubted nothing, asked nothing—could be well-content with food and a man. But—something stubborn within him held on.

Karen said incisively, "You promised you'd turn back if I asked."

"Not yet. Later, if you want. Not yet."

He had given up ever hearing any expression from her again, before she spoke.

"I guess—" she said—"I guess, Dick, I don't blame you."

Of all things on earth, he had least expected to hear that. Inane-ly he said, "Again, please?"

"Men are what they are," Karen said, her voice somehow distant, yet not unfriendly—"and women are what they are. People who hunt for the absolute are fools."

"Always?"

"Oh, yes; always. But maybe I'm a fool, too. I think—" Her tone wavered, but steadied again. "I think—maybe you'd better go on. Go on to Hilo—and give me a little time. We'll still come out, Dick, I think."

"Listen," Dick said, "I want you to have this decently straight. I give you my word—and I wouldn't offer proof if I could—I never made love to this girl in my life, nor so much as laid a hand on her."

"No?"

He didn't even bother to answer that; he knew what to expect from this girl by now. He held on still because to him only one adventure was conceivable, and that adventure was Karen—literally, for she was more than an epitome: she was the adventure itself.

"I don't see why—" Karen began. The rushing sound of the Holokai through the uneven sea seemed to come between them again, so that he never knew what she had started to say.

Suddenly he turned, and shouted for Inyashi; the little Japanese came running along the deck.

"Get—get ready to put about."

"Yes, Captain."

Almost at once the voice of the ship altered, slackening off and quieting.

"So," Karen said, "it was you who changed your mind, after all!"

Dick said thickly, "You're going to have to believe the truth when I tell it to you."

"Either," she said, "I'll take you as you really are, or I'll never take you at all."

"You'll never take me, or I you," Dick said harshly, "on the basis of any such lie as is in your mind."

"The Polynesians are known everywhere as a mild, easygoing race. Am I supposed to think that this Kanaka woman, without any encouragement or any past relationship with you, suddenly runs wild, and goes to passionate, extreme lengths—"

"Lilua is not all Polynesian, Karen."

"I have no doubt she's a little of everything."

"I don't think you're so very charitable, either to her or to me. Not even to yourself."

"To myself?"

He was silent.

"She's beautiful, Dick," Karen said. "I can see that. But I hate her, Dick. When I look at the dark, coppery color of her skin, and think of you touching her—it seems to me that I can never look at a brown skin again without—"

"Stop it! You don't know what you're saying."

"Well, she is of a different color."

"Karen—that girl is your cousin."

A few seconds passed while she comprehended that; then she whirled sharply toward him. "You mean to tell me—"

"You wondered why Lilu has charge of the whole house on Alakoa? You wondered if there wasn't a special answer to that? Well, now you know the right answer. Lilu is Garrett Waterson's granddaughter—just the same as you."

He faced her squarely. Her whole body seemed to have gone tense, but for the moment she was unable to speak; and he never found out what she would have asked him first.

From within the ship issued a thin, small, and somehow distant sound—unrecognizable and inarticulate, but so thoroughly unaccountable in the ordinary world of reality that the Holokai was instantly struck motionless. Even the perpetually trotting Inyashi stopped, and stood frozen on the swaying deck. They were waiting to hear if that sound should come again, once more cutting through the laboring of the little ship, and the great, persistent rush and wallop of the sea.

It did not come again; but after a moment Dick knew that what he had heard was a woman's terrified scream.

It was Dick himself who burst into action. He raced aft, sprang into the ladder well, and in a second more was in the main cabin, where he, and Karen, and Lilua had faced each other such a little while ago; and here he stood, for a moment balancing to the sea.

He didn't see her at first. That cabin, deep, but narrow as the little ship, seemed strangely empty; he had paced alone here a thousand times, without ever sensing the utter vacancy that was here now. The door of his little cabin, wedged into the stern, was flapping loosely against its latch—swinging half open, then banging shut again without catching, with the perversity of all doors. He sprang the length of the cabin with a furious activity; and booted that door into its wall-catch, once and for all; but there was no one in the cramped stall where he usually slept.

Then, turning, he saw her; and was instantly by her side. Lilua lay in a little crumpled heap at the end of the table, and half under it. He had seen death many times; but it seemed to him now that he had never seen anyone so utterly lifeless, so completely slumped into an unutterable oblivion, as Lilua's form seemed there, dropped like seaweed left on the beach.

He picked her up in his arms—gently as he could, but so handily that the Holokai's roll that he cursed the helmsman for not holding the vessel steadier into the seas.

He got her down onto his own bunk at last. He kissed her mouth as he laid her down, then sought the source of the blood that was staining his shirt, and the bunk upon which he had placed her. There was a knife wound under Lilua's left breast—how deep he could not tell. He snatched cotton from an emergency cabinet nailed to the wall, and crammed it deep into the wound. She stiffened convulsively when he did that. It was his first intimation that she was alive.

He tucked a blanket over her tightly, so that she would not be rolled by the Holokai's pitch, and stepped to the door. The Chinese mess boy had appeared uncertainly from the pantry; Dick seized him, and pulled him into the bunk room.

JESUS APPOINTS AND TEACHES THE TWELVE

LESSON TEXT—Luke 6:12-26.

GOLDEN TEXT—Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven.—Matthew 5:16.

God is sovereign and has all power. He might, therefore, perform His works without the help of man, and on many an occasion He does just that.

That fact makes it all the more glorious that He ordinarily works through men, giving to them the privilege of companionship with Him in service. Sinful and weak though they may have been, they become strong and holy in Him, able to do valiant service in His name.

I. Appointed to Serve Christ (vv. 12-19).

It is the constant teaching of Scripture that those called to serve God are not self-appointed. They are

1. Chosen by Him (vv. 12, 13). He chooses whom He will, gives them the gifts and the grace for ministry (and both are important!), and provides them a place of service. It is vital to the servant of Christ that he know that he has been chosen and called of the Lord. Only with that assurance can he meet the problems and bear the burdens of the work.

Observe that it was after a night of prayer that Jesus appointed the twelve. How many churches give that much prayer to the choosing of its leaders? Do we not need it far more than did our Lord?

2. Called from Many Walks of Life (vv. 14-16). The apostles were men of widely differing gifts, temperaments, and personal characteristics. Some had unusual ability, others apparently were of ordinary qualifications. They were of many occupations, fishermen, a tax gatherer, etc.; but not one was by profession a preacher or priest.

Were men to choose for such offices they would look within the narrow limits of a few learned professions, with certain nationalities preferred, and with position in life an important factor. God cuts across every man-made limitation and calls His workers as He sees fit.

3. Companions in Service (vv. 17-19). At once the twelve received their introduction to service to the great multitude diseased, demon possessed, in spiritual need. It was Jesus who healed them (and notice that "he healed them all," v. 19), but verse 17 tells us that the newly appointed apostles came and stood with Him. They had fellowship with the healing and serving Christ, just as we may have it in service for Him today.

II. Prepared to Live for Christ (vv. 20-26).

Service for Christ is as much (perhaps we should say, more) by life as by ministry. The twelve needed instruction that their spiritual perspective might be right. He tells them

1. How to Meet Difficulties (vv. 20-23). Poverty, hunger, weeping, being hated for Christ's sake, these were the things that Jesus knew His servants might expect, so He prepared them. They were told that these things need not disturb them, for there is a kingdom coming; there will be a time when every hunger will be satisfied, when weeping shall turn to laughter.

Hated for Christ's sake is declared to be the occasion for the outburst of joy because of the reward which awaits in heaven. Scripture speaks much of rewards, and we do well to encourage ourselves and other Christians by the blessed prospect.

Meeting difficulties is a matter of having mental and spiritual eyes rightly focused. If we do, we can see right through them and see that on the other side there is blessing.

But there are temptations in another direction, so He tells them

2. How to Avoid Dangers (vv. 24-26). Jesus is here speaking of those who, lacking true spiritual vision, revel in the satisfaction of worldly things without a thought of God. The passage, however, may well be applied to the worker for Christ. Often he will be tempted to covet the wealth, the prosperity, the pleasures, and popularity of those round about him.

The question which comes to him is, Why should I and my family not share these pleasant things? Therein lies a temptation to become worldly-minded, centered in the temporalities of life. Let him learn that money in itself cannot bring lasting joy; that the fullness of this world is soon exchanged for an eternal emptiness; that the shallow laughter of this world's fun rapidly gives way to weeping.

The praise of men—popularity with those who know not Christ—is a fickle thing. One day they will praise a man to the skies, and the next day no evil word or disgraceful treatment is spared to destroy and dishearten him.

Tenor Offered a Chance To Reach the Top Note

It was after the opera. The expensively dressed woman approached the broad-shouldered and faultlessly attired man.

"If I am not mistaken," she gushed, "I have the honor of speaking to the renowned tenor, have I not?"

The celebrated singer felt flattered and beamed upon her, and with a nod of his head, he asked, "Is there something I can do for you, madam?"

"I can't find my car," she answered pleasantly. "Would you be so kind as to call out 'Charlie' at the top of your voice? I am sure he will hear you!"

WHAT HAPPENS IF YOU DELAY IN MAKING YOUR INCOME TAX RETURNS

In the event of failure to make and file an income tax return as required by law within the prescribed time, a certain percent of the amount of the tax is required to be added to the tax unless failure to file return within the prescribed time is shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner to be due to reasonable cause and not to willful neglect.

The amount to be added to the tax is 5 per cent if the failure is for more than thirty days, with an additional 5 per cent for each additional thirty days or fraction thereof during which failure to file a return continues, not to exceed 25 per cent in the aggregate.

A taxpayer who files a tardy return and wishes to avoid the addition to the tax for delinquency must make an affirmative showing of all facts, alleged as a reasonable cause for failure to file the return on time, in the form of an affidavit which should be attached to the return. Alleged ignorance of the law does not constitute reasonable cause for delinquency.

Taxpayers should make every effort to file their returns within the time prescribed by law and thus avoid the possibility of the additions to the tax for delinquency in filing returns.

Do not forget that single persons or married persons not living with husband or wife, who earn as much as $14.45 a week for the 52 weeks of the year, and married persons living together who have aggregate earnings of as much as $28.90 a week for the year, are required to file returns.

BIG WRESTLING BOUT AT JOLIET FRIDAY NIGHT

Friday evening, February 20 the regular professional wrestling show will take place starting at 8:30 p.m. under the promotion of Walter Shaughnessy, in the Catholic High School gym, Joliet.

A grudge match will headline the bill with Sluggers Jack Conley facing Gorilla Grubmyer in a three fall match to a finish, no time limit. These two roughies really make things hum when they are in the ring and this match should be exceptional. At the request of Conley that this match was arranged due to the fact that the gorilla roughed up a protégé of Sluggers in a recent show here. The fans that like their wrestling will welcome this match.

The other bouts include Seelie Lamara vs. King Kong Clayton two hundred pound colored giants and John Melas a Greek boy and Dick Elitz of New Mexico. All of these matches are outstanding and should provide an evening of real wrestling entertainment.

REPAIR FARM MACHINES AND THUS PROVIDE MORE MATERIAI FOR ARMY

Repair farm machinery and put more guns in the hands of the fighting forces.

This is the suggestion made to farmers by Carl M. Bormet, chairman of the Cook County USDA War Board, who points out that every piece of old farm machinery that can be reconditioned and put to use in 1942 means critical materials saved for a new implement of war.

The Office of Production Management recognized the vital importance of farm production in the war effort by allocating for farm machinery and repair parts as much as possible of the materials needed for guns, tanks, planes, and ships, Mr. Bormet explained.

But every farmer who repairs an old machine, instead of buying a new one to replace it as he might do in normal times, is giving two fold aid to the fighting forces by releasing essential materials for war use as well as producing food for the war effort, Mr. Bormet said.

In the campaign now under way for the repair of old farm machinery in Cook County, time is the essential element, Mr. Bormet emphasized. Farmers can be sure of getting repair parts for planting, cultivating and harvesting this year's crops only by checking all machinery now and ordering parts immediately, he said.

Tinley Methodist Church Holding Its First Novena

The following questions and answers have been issued by Rev. Weinrich pastor of the Tinley Park Methodist Church where the Protestant novena is being held.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

1. What is a Novena?

A Novena consists of NINE consecutive services, and upon "enrolling" you designate that you will make a Novena—that is, that you will attend nine services without any break.

2. What does "Novena" mean?

It comes from the Latin "Novem", meaning nine. In church circles it has come to mean a nine day period of prayer and devotion for a special object or objects of petition.

3. Is it Biblical?

Decidedly so, for, God admonishes His children to "pray without ceasing" (1 Thes. 5:17) and said that "the effectual prayer of a righteous man availeth much." (James 5:16)

4. How do I begin?

Procure an enrollment card, fill it out, and bring it to the first service, you can come to. These services will be held for at least twelve weeks.

5. Who should make a Novena?

Everyone who believes God is a prayer answering Heavenly Father should make a Novena by placing his problems and requests before God in a humble petition.

6. For what may we make a Novena?

The words of Jesus will suffice: "Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name that will I do." (John 14:13) "If ye ask anything in my name, that will I do." (John 14:14) The answer is clearly "whatsoever," and "anything" meaning all material, physical and spiritual needs.

7. Should I make a Novena for others?

Yes, by all means! We have scripture passages for praying with and for one another. See 2 Cor. 1:11 and Rev. 5:8.

8. Why should we be specific in our Novena Prayers?

This is one of the very important phases of Novena Prayers. We must be specific—"Ye ask and receive not because ye ask amiss." (James 4:3) We should name the object, whether material, physical, spiritual or personal. It is the definite petition that will be definitely answered.

9. Is it necessary to attend nine Novenas?

Unless nine are attended, it will not be a Novena. Remember, Novena means nine!

10. If I miss one Service, must I begin again?

A Novena consists of nine consecutive prayer services. Answer this yourself.

11. Should I make an offering each time?

Yes an offering is a part of you. When you give, you give yourself. It is therefore an essential part of every service. "Give and it shall be given unto you. (Luke 6:38).

12. What is a thank offering?

When a prayer has been heard and definitely answered, a thank offering should be made to the kingdom of God, both as an expression of gratitude for the answer to prayer, and as an offering which will make the Gospel of Jesus Christ available to others. See 2 Chronicles, 29:31.

13. Is it necessary to be on time?

As prayer begins immediately after the opening hymn, it is quite necessary that all worshippers be in their places at the beginning of the services and not later than the third stanza of the opening hymn.

14. Should we ask for material things?

Yes, Christians have done this in the past and have always been heard. "All things, whatsoever ye pray and ask for believing that ye receive them, and ye shall have them." (Mark 11:24)

15. Shall we ask for physical healing?

God has included this in His enumeration of things we may ask for. "Pray for one another, that ye may be healed." (James 5:16).

16. May we ask for spiritual help?

Faith is the basis for spiritual help and we may pray in faith for spiritual blessings. (See 2 Thess. 1:11)

17. How may I know the procedure of the Novena Service?

A manual, or order of worship will be prepared and made available for every worshiper, as a guide, so that he may know, step by step, the pathway of worship.

18. How are our personal petitions made?

They are made by ourselves, personally and silently, at the proper time and place in the service. To assist in the formulation of specific needs and petitions, each worshiper should fill out the Prayer Request at the beginning of each service, and deposit it on the offering plate at the proper time.

19. How long will a single service last?

The duration of one service is calculated to last one hour. This leaves the major part of the evening free, from 8:45 on.

Congressional Views

By Chauncey Reed

The plight of General MacArthur and his troops on the fortified Philippines has brought back the subject of the proposed fortification of Guam and last week many Senators were patting themselves on the back because funds had been refused in the past to initiate that project. As a matter of fact, the fortification of Guam question never came before the Senate or the House of Representatives either, for that matter. It was President Roosevelt's Bureau of the Budget that caused its rejection.

The Navy Department early in 1941 had asked for its consideration but admitted before the House Naval affairs committee that it would cost about two hundred million dollars to do the job. Evidently the Bureau of the Budget believed that such an expenditure was unjustified for they registered a "thumbs down" on the fortification plans and cut the Navys estimates or current expenditures in Guam to five million dollars which amount was to be spent only for dredging and clearing the harbor. The House, a little over a year previously, had voted down an appropriation or that amount for the same purpose. In 1914 it was defeated in the House a second time, and as things turned out, those two defeats were most fortunate both for the taxpayers of the country and the Navy itself. We are five million dollars richer (or rather five million dollars less in debt) and the Japs do not now have the additional advantage of using that harbor today as a fleet base of their own.

It will be recalled that in his budget message to the Congress in January President Roosevelt served notice he would in future be unable or unwilling to tell the nation the details of appropriations and expenditures. Only the gross figures on appropriations would be made public and the gross figures on expenditures. Of course this opens the way to all sorts of concealments, mispending of funds and mistakes of various kinds without the knowledge of either the Congress or the people; but Washington observers believe the President's declaration stuck and will not be challenged—not soon, at least. Now it develops that the new Office of the Censor is clamping down on one of the best news sources in the Capital, Congressional hearings on departmental appropriations. The volumes of printed testimony used to be thick and bulky. Of late they are thin and very unenlightening.

AUTOMATIC REFRIGERATOR

● In these days, when all of us are doing our best to build up savings, it pays to review every-day expenditures—amounts we have regarded as "fixed", such as food budgets and other kitchen expenses. Maybe we'll find that some of the money we are now paying out can be converted to savings without lowering our standard of living.

Here are 7 proved ways of saving money on your automatic refrigerator. Put them into operation in your house today... you'll soon feel the effect of the savings!

FREE—Write or inquire at your Public Service Store for the useful booklet, "How to Get the Most from Your Electric Service". Gives valuable tips, costs you nothing.

1 Be sure your refrigerator is not set flush against the wall—it can't move to run its fan. There should be an air space.

2 Take advantage of the savings which result from quantity buying of groceries. You can save $3.00 to $4.00 per month in this way alone. Your refrigerator will keep the food fresh.

3 When you plan a meal, plan how to use the leftovers. You can keep them safely in your automatic refrigerator.

4 Don't place food directly against the freezing compartment—this obstructs the circulation of cool air throughout the refrigerator.

5 Count the number of times a day you open the refrigerator door—divide it by two, and stick with it! You'll pay less to operate it.

6 Defrost regularly, according to your instruction book.

7 If something goes wrong, call in a service man at once, while the trouble is slight. Delay may cost you a high service bill.

BARR undayO bmrll((

Richard J. Barr was born on a farm in Manhattan. In all there were four boys and four girls in the family.

With the outbreak of this war, Senator Barr immediately became an important factor in helping with legislation necessary to correlate the defense work of the state with that of the nation. As he was the legislative right arm of Governor Frank O. Lowden in the Senate during the First World War, he possesses experience that will be invaluable to Governor Green during the present world conflict. Many friends have insisted, therefore, that he stand for re election and serve this district during the hard years of the war and the days which follow its conclusion. They feel that his experience, statesmanship and rugged Americanism have never been more needed at Springfield than now.

HUSBAND AND CHILDREN

SCHOOL NEWS

PRIMARY Room. The boys and girls of the Primary room went to the Field Museum and Aquarium Saturday, February 14. The trip was enjoyed by all and proved to be very worth while. The Primary Room wishes to thank the PTA which sponsored this lovely trip.

The room has a sunshine box which is proving quite interesting. Actions becoming to a child are noticed by the other pupils. The good deeds are written on a slip of paper and once each week the box will be opened and the papers read.

INTERMEDIATE Room: Last Friday the Intermediate Room had a Valentine party. They played games, did stunts and had a Valentine exchange. Each pupil received a valentine heart from Mrs. Ferguson.

Everyone is glad to see Dorothy Ann Rauch back again after a long absence. Louis Stark and Barbara Bickley visited us last Thursday. The fifth grade is busy making peep hoes. The best one will win a prize.

The co-operation council is going to bring sunshine to the room by watching for various good deeds done by the pupils. These will be reported to the room once a week.

Junior High Room. The Jr. High Room will present their assembly program in honor of Geo. Washington Monday afternoon at 2:50 p.m.

HIGH SCHOOL Room: The room has a valentine exchange last Friday afternoon. Every one enjoyed it as much as we did when we were in the lower grades.

The Freshman Geography class has been the Latin American countries. Everyone did a project of their own choice in connection with the study and we have some excellent results now on display in the room.

STUDENT Council: A chart has been put up in the hall to show how many Defense stamps each room buys. Monday was our best day when $32.20 was taken in.

ATHLETICS. The Mokena grade school boys played New Lenox grade school last Wednesday at Basketball and were defeated by a score of 21-19. They played Orland Park last Saturday night and finished with a score of 54-14 in favor of Orland. The high school boys played Orland Park Saturday. There was a large crowd out to support both teams. Our boys were defeated with a score of 37-21. The next game is at Mokena with Manhattan February 27. We hope that all of you will come out and see the boys play.

The Mokena team drew Crete to play in the Grant Park District tournament.

Mrs. Susan Smith who had the misfortune of breaking her hip some time ago, and who has been in Silver Cross hospital since, returned to her home last week. Mrs. Alma Brown is helping to care for her.

The home of Harold Cooper is out of quarantine. Mrs. Cooper and daughter have recovered from scarlet fever. Also the Fred Werner home is out of quarantine. Mr. Werner and children having recovered from the same illness.

The residence of Geo. Koeller Jr., on Front street, now occupied by his mother, has been sold to a retired farmer family coming from West Point, Neb.

A daughter was born in Silver Cross hospital Monday to Mr. and Mrs. Wesley Capple. Mrs. Capple is the former Miss Margaret Krusemark.

Mrs. Harry Cooper received word from her brother John Winke who is in the armed service of our country, and who is stationed in the state of Washington, that he has been promoted to a Corporal.

The children and youth of Mokena have been enjoying themselves this past week in ice skating. The rain of last week flooded the field south of the Rock Island tracks, making a large pond which froze in good condition.

Robert Geuther, Mokena Scoutmaster, took his troop on an interesting tour thru the Chicago Tribune plant last Friday night. The boys came in time to see the second edition being printed and had a fine opportunity to see how a great metropolitan daily paper is published. The trip to and from Chicago was made by train.

Senator R. J. Barr Announces Candidacy

The announcement that Senator Richard J. Barr is to run for reelection to the Illinois State Senate is good news or the people of this district. For many years, Senator Barr has worked hard and well for the best interests of the people of his state and his district. To him goes much of the credit for the fact that Illinois has long been in the fore front in progressive farm and labor legislation, and to Barr goes much credit for the vast network of hard roads that has made this state outstanding in that regard. The growingly important Deep Waterway is also a monument to the foresight and unremitting efforts of Senator Barr, who worked for it against opposition.

Senator Barr has served with nine governors. Yates, Deneen, Dunne, Lowden, Small, Emmerson, Horner Steele and Green. And so great has been his ability and influence that even under Democratic administrations he has been a power at Springfield. He has been president pro tempore of the Senate and on many occasions has served as acting governor. During the last session, Barr was just as active a leader as he has been for many years.

Will Present Passion Play

Announcement has been made that The American Passion Play will open its nineteenth annual season in the auditorium of the Scottish Rite Temple, Bloomington, Ill. Sunday afternoon April 12.

There will be nine performances this year, one on each Sunday afternoon up to and including May 31 and one Saturday afternoon performance May 9.

So many people have written in urging the management not to discontinue the play this year but to give performances as usual for the benefit of the many patrons who receive spiritual inspiration from witnessing this magnificent production. The American Passion Play is the largest stage production in the world, its objective is to bring to men and women a better understanding of Jesus of Nazareth and his mission.

The play adheres strictly to the facts and teachings as portrayed in the four Gospels and at no time is there any deviation from what is understood to be the purpose of Jesus as he ministered to the peoples of his time.

Seats for the production are now on sale and those expecting to attend should make early reservations.

More Than Ever We Need

BARR

At Springfield

With America at war, it is more important than ever that we have in the State Legislature men of wide experience and proved ability. RICHARD J. BARR, dean of State Senators, has given this district years of loyal and distinguished service.

Because of his influence we have the best system of hard roads of any State, the growingly important Deep Waterway, and many advantageous farm and labor laws. BARR knows and understands the people of this district and they understand and have confidence in him. More than ever, we need—should have—his leadership and experience in the State Senate.

The Truth of It Is . . . This Cherry Torten Is Good!
(See Recipes Below)

Washington Day Ideas

It took Washington to make the cherry famous by telling the truth about cutting down that famous tree, but it takes only a sampling to make us appreciate the excellence of this luscious red-ripe berry.

If you're sensitive to color, and most of you are, I am sure, then you can make the most of the possibilities which the cherry offers for pepping up winter mealtime. With appetites riding high, but opportunities for decoration fairly low in these colder months, the Washington birthday and its synonym the cherry, come to the rescue. All of today's recipes have "Um-um" tacked onto them, so make your bids for fame by starting off with:

*Cherry Torten. (Serves 6 to 8)

Torten Layer:
1 cup sifted flour
1/2 teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon sugar
1/2 cup butter
1 egg yolk, slightly beaten

Combine flour, salt and sugar. Cut in butter with knives or pastry blender. Add beaten egg yolk and mix thoroughly. Press this mixture into baking dish or pie tin. Cover with cherry topping and bake in a hot (425-degree) oven for 15 minutes. Reduce heat to moderate (350 degree) for about 20 minutes. Serve hot or cold, with whipped or plain cream if desired.

Cherry Topping:
1 No. 2 can red, tart, pitted cherries
1/2 cup sugar
4 tablespoons cornstarch
1 tablespoon butter

Drain juice from cherries. Heat to boiling point. Combine sugar and cornstarch. Add enough cold water to make a smooth paste. Pour this gradually into the boiling cherry juice and cook 5 minutes, stirring constantly. Remove from fire, add cherries and butter.

This upside down cake is as good as it looks because the cherries are interlaced with the delicious caramel mixture. You'll be extra clever for varying the dessert course with this newcomer to the upside down cake family for it's bound to carry off first honors:

Cherry Upside Down Cake.
2 eggs
1/2 cup sugar
1/2 cup boiling water
1/2 cup cake flour
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/2 teaspoon baking powder
1 teaspoon lemon or orange extract
1 1/2 cups red, pitted cherries
1/2 cup butter
1/2 cup brown sugar

Beat yolks until thick; add sugar gradually. Continue beating and add water. Mix well and add sifted

Lynn Says:

The cherry family is one with many branches. In addition to the red, tart pitted cherries which are abundant in the summer and which can easily be put up well in cans, there are two other types of cherries worthy of mention.

The first of these is a white type cherry commonly called Queen Anne. This lends itself well to salads and adds distinctive flavor especially when used in combination with other fruits such as pineapple, oranges, grapefruit and bananas. A little bit of the Queen Anne cheery goes a long way.

The other type, called Bing cherries, are deep, dark red, and quite sweet. For that reason they are at home in desserts. They can be made into sauces and served over ice creams and puddings.

STORY OF THE WEEK

How a "Poet" Proved a Point

By RICHARD HILL WILKINSON

(Associated Newspapers—WNU Service.)

DELLA knew she was going to have difficulty in making Andy understand how she felt, and she did. It was hard putting the thing into words—telling a man that you didn't think he could make you happy because he was unromantic and unpoetic and placed too much value on material things.

"But you do understand what I mean, don't you, Andy?" she pleaded almost desperately.

"No," said Andy, "I don't." Della rested a hand on his arm and smiled up at him. "Andy, you're big and strong and dependable. You're security personified, and everyone will think me crazy for not marrying you. But it wouldn't be fair to myself."

Andy bit his lip and punched a hole in the soft earth of the terrace with his heel. "Maybe," he said, "you'll get a chance to meet this—poetic guy."

"Now, Andy, what's the use—?"

"I mean it," said Andy gloomily. "There's a guy coming up tomorrow. A classmate of mine. He's a poet." Andy said "poet" with the same inflection of tone with which he would have said "rattlesnake."

"Andy—not a real poet?"

"Yup," said Andy, striving to conceal his disgust at the ecstatic look in Della's eyes. "I—I was going to warn you against him. He was always queer. And now that he's started writing rhymes he's turned into what I'd call a nut!"

"Oh, Andy!"

Andy stood up. He hesitated a moment, looking down at the girl with an expression of misery. He sighed, and recalled how once during the days when he was a football hero in college, he had been fool enough to think he understood women.

"Dinner!" Horace's tones cut in with scorn. "How can you speak of dinner at a moment like this?"

Horace Weatherby, the poet, arrived on the following day. The half dozen guests seated on the terrace stared in rather dumfounded fashion. One or two of them tittered, for they thought it was some kind of joke. But Horace was as oblivious to their reaction as he was to his unpressed and worn trousers, his rumpled coat, his black, flowing tie, his battered felt hat. He looked about him, clasped his hands, gazed up at the mountains, and began to babble something about the hills and the rills.

Then Andy came down the walk and with him was Della. "Hello, Horace," said Andy, grasping his hands, "how's the rhyming business?" He paused, took note of the fact that Horace was gazing into Della's eyes in a manner similar to that with which he had seen a frightened child gaze at a snake, cleared his throat noisily, and said, "Horace, meet Della Small. She's—er—interested in poetry."

"Beautiful!" Horace whispered. "Beautiful!" Then he took one of Della's hands in both of his own and kissed it. Della blushed, but there was no doubt in Andy's mind that she was enjoying herself.

Andy discovered before the afternoon was far advanced that, as far as his old classmate and Della Small were concerned he suddenly had ceased to exist. Moodily he watched from a distance as Horace led Della to a secluded nook on the wide veranda. It was not hard to guess from the many gestures toward the mountain, hand-clapping and soulful expression that Horace was reciting poetry. Nor was it hard to guess either that Della was thrilled, excited, fascinated, enraptured and, Andy thought dimly, infatuated. The sight sickened him, but he did not relax his vigil.

Toward evening the pair strolled along the trail which led to the fish pond at the foot of the mountains. Andy followed them, then concealed himself in some bushes near by. It was agony watching Della make such a fool of herself over a man who probably didn't earn $1,000 a year.

As the twilight deepened, Andy drew nearer. The pangs of hunger were gnawing at his vitals, but he told himself grimly that if Della could survive the evening on rhymes instead of beefsteak, so could he.

Presently the voices of the lovers were audible to him, and he realized with a shock that Della's tones were not altogether as rapturous as he had expected them to be. She was saying:

"But, Horace, we really ought to go back. It's past dinner time and I'm hungry and—"

"Dinner!" Horace's tones cut in with scorn. "How can you speak of dinner at a moment like this? Hunger? My dear, there is no hunger but the hunger of a soul for beauty; the hunger of a man like me for a mate such as you. My darling, look at the mountains. Does not their beauty, their grandeur—"

"Yes. Yes, they're beautiful, Horace, and your poetry is beautiful, only I had an early lunch and not much at that. I really think you'd better take me back."

"Take you back? Never!" There was a pause, and Andy, peering through the bushes, saw the outline of Horace's head as he leaned toward Della; saw Della shrink away from him. Horace's voice was hoarse, passionate, domineering. "You are mine! Mine! Do you understand? You have been in my life always, and today I found you. Never shall I let you go! My soul and yours are interlocked by the bonds of a love deeper than the deepest river and shall never be severed. Come into my arms, my dearest."

At this point it occurred to Andy that since college days his ex-classmate had become a little screwy. And he decided to do something about it. Emerging from his place of concealment, he strolled toward the fish pond, assuming a casual attitude.

There was rustling near the bench where sat Della and her poet had sat. Andy heard a little suppressed cry of relief, and presently a pair of white arms were flung around his neck and a voice was sobbing close to his ear. "Oh, Andy, Andy! I was mistaken. I didn't mean it. He—I—"

Andy stepped back. "What!" he exclaimed in well-feigned astonishment, "you here! Well, well, fancy that!" which he thought was as poetical a speech as anyone could make.

At this point Poet Weatherby appeared out of the gloom and said in strident tones: "Unhand that woman, scum!"

Whereupon Andy loosened one of his arms and smote Mr. Weatherby a very telling blow on the button. Della clung to him and whimpered, Andy said something about a beefsteak, and she nodded in a fashion that gave Andy the impression she would not thus to any old suggestion he cared to make. So he picked her up and carried her majestically from the scene of the battle.

Later that night Andy made an unobtrusive departure from the hotel and in a deserted section of the driveway came upon a man seated on a rock. The man was Poet Weatherby.

"Hello," said Andy. "Been waiting long?"

"About an hour, you big ape," said Horace. "Say, what's the idea of poking me one on the button? That wasn't in the bargain."

"It wasn't in the bargain either to try to kiss my girl. However, here's your money. Now scram before she sees you hanging around and gets suspicious."

"O.K." Horace thumbed through a wad of bills and grinned. "Nice going, Andy. Say, you sure know how to handle women."

"That," said Andy, "is because I take beefsteak with my rhymes."

Before Buying Used Car Get Okeh From Mechanic

Best insurance of all when buying a used car is to pay a mechanic you trust to look it over. Here are some of the things he will do:

Before taking it out, he will stare at the driver's seat, the floor boards, foot pedals, running boards, door catches and snubbers. These things are among the least important on the car, but they give him an idea of the car's real mileage, rather than the speedometer which can be adjusted to any lie. Under the fenders he peers and if one of them is new, it alerts an accident and makes him alert for other clues.

If the rear seats show unusual wear, he gives the body a hard look for spots where signs and lights may once have been and pecks off a bit of the new paint. Should he find the kind of paint usually used on taxis, he walks out. It is all he needs to know. Should the car stand a preliminary once-over, he takes it for a good long demonstration. It runs sweetly without any knocks. But why does he stop and smell the gas tank? It might contain ether, which prevents knocks but burns the cylinders out. While the car is stopped, he rubs off a smear of grease because this is an old trick for hiding the seam where a cracked engine has been welded.

Speeding the car up to 45 miles an hour, he takes his foot from the accelerator, then jams it down again, and looks backward. What's the idea? Well, if the piston rings are worn, there will be a cloud of blue smoke. Also he examines the oil. If this is extra heavy, it is another indication of the same weakness.

TODAY, Democracy is not hard to appreciate. We know it is not just a few hazy words written on parchment or an ideal that has outlived its usefulness, but rather, the greatest success story ever told.
